

Union Bank, N.A.

Union Bank is proud to be a good community partner, proactively investing in the communities it serves through the Union Bank Foundation. The Foundation targets its resources to revitalize and empower low- to moderate-income populations, and has made significant contributions to the local economy and the quality of life for residents of the San Joaquin Valley.

Over the past five years, Union Bank's Foundation has donated more than $1.8 million to Valley nonprofits, targeting organizations that support economic development, affordable housing, education and the environment.

Organizations such as Boys and Girls Clubs of Fresno County, The Valley Small Business Development Corporation, and Habitat for Humanity have benefited significantly from Union Bank grants, and have in turn used those resources to keep kids off the streets, grow small businesses and build affordable housing for Valley residents.

In addition, Union Bank employees devote hundreds of hours each year volunteering in the community, serving on boards of local business and nonprofit groups, and through the bank's employee volunteer organization.

Whether they're planting trees with Tree Fresno, answering phones for Valley Public Television pledge drives, or collecting toys for Toys for Tots, Union Bank volunteers are actively engaged in bettering their community. This year, the bank is even launching a program that will offer each employee a full day off—with pay—to volunteer their time at a nonprofit organization of their choice.
